THE SPEECH OF Sir George Pudſey Kt.

(Serjeant at Law, and Recorder of Oxon)

TO THE

KING,

UPON

His MAJESTY's Coming to OXFORD,

Sept. 3. 1687.

OXON:

Printed by HENRY CRUTTENDEN, One of His MAJESTY's Printers, and Printer to His ARMY.

MDCLXXXVII.

Sir George Pudſey's Speech to the KING.

Dread Sovereign,

SO vaſt an Awe and Deference is due to the Majeſty of a Crowned Head, that the moſt polite Wit ought to have a great preſence of mind, that ſpeaks before Him; therefore one ſo unworthy of this Honour as my ſelf, humbly implores Your Majeſties patience, and pardon for his failings.

Great SIR, No ſooner Your Majeſty aſcended the Throne of Your Royal Anceſtors, but You were proclaimed a Favourite of Heaven, the Wicked were taken in their own Nets, mighty Rebels fell before You, and Your Loyal Subjects rejoiced in Peace: Anſwerable to theſe glorious beginnings hath been Your Majeſties Character to this moment. Thus Virtuous Princes bleſs their people; Hezekiah's Holineſs ſaved his Kingdom, when David's Sin coſt him 70000 Men. The great Cyrus was promiſed by Name, long before his Birth, to give eaſe and deliverance to the poor Captive Jews; and my Information fails me, if Your Majeſty was not mentioned more than One Hundred Years ago, by one of Your Royal Predeceſſors, to be given us (moſt unworthy of You) to raiſe theſe Nations once again to Glory; For You, Great Sir, even againſt our Wills will make us Happy: Your Royal Breaſt having treaſured up ſuch a Magazine of all Princely Virtues, that were Your Kingdoms Elective, the Suffrages and Votes of all men of Honor, Senſe and Goodneſs, would be given You, with humble Supplications to accept the Royal Diadem. What are not our very Wiſhes indulged in, under Your moſt auſpicious Reign? All Fears, but ſuch as attend Women and Children, are removed: Property and Liberty, thoſe darling Concerns, are ſo far from being invaded by You, that common Aids and Supplies to the King are almoſt forgot by us. Have not we of the Church of England your Sacred Word (which never failed any yet that relyed on it) to protect her in her Rites and Priviledges? As for thoſe of Your Majeſties Communion, Truth will defend me, If I ſay, their Sufferings and Loyalties have been great and eminent, and of late, the firſt highly injur'd by the Oaths of perjured Villains (too much incouraged); They have your Favour, and deſerve a publick Reparation. As Your Majeſty is, ſo is Your Mercy, for are not other Diſſenters too as well as them (contrary to the meaſures of another Prince) by Your unparallel'd Clemency freed from the Snares of Penal Laws relating to Religion, made purely for the Prince's Safety, and concerns no one elſe. This high flight of Royal Grace, ſo like your Great Maſter's Example, after ſo much Diſloyalty to the Crown, is ſuch a wonder to the preſent Age, that future times will will call Romantick. Therefore what Subject, either concerned, or as a Christian (whose chiefest virtue is Charity) will not give his humble Thanks?

Thus far Your Majesty hath gone by Your undoubted Prerogative; and indeed what is not the Prerogative of an Absolute Monarch, let the Learned determine. Many of them say, His Condescention to Laws is rather a politick Mercy, than any Obligation: But to avoid too nice an Inquiry, common Reason, and the Kingdoms Interest, obliges me to believe the concurrence of a Parliament to so National a Good; And that were it moved by them, and the Royal Assent denyed, the Writ de Heretico Comburendo would be feared again. These Scars in Government once perfectly healed, no more Families will be ruined, Prisons filled, or Pockets emptied for Consciences sake (the Almighty's Province only.) Then will every Subject according to Nature's Laws, which no human act can restrain, by the most ignorant be allowed capable to serve Your Majesty according to his merit. Then all hands will be at work like Bees carrying to the common Hive; Trade, the life of every Island, flourish, Your Majesties Treasure and Your Subjects Talents increase, whilst You, Great Sir, the common Parent of your Country, watches for us all. We shall then contract the sullen Brows of other Nations, who will hate the Lands of their Nativities. Your Majesty, the Great Monopolist of Wisdom and Experience, knows what measures best to take to attain these mighty Ends: Your Power is like Your Courage, both invincible; A Princes best Security. For Sir, as Love and Fear sends Souls to Heaven, so both together make Monarchs Safe, and Subjects Loyal. Now all Welcome to Cæsar to his ever Loyal City; and all Joy to us, who most humbly and chearfully offer up our Hearts and Acclamations to Your Majesty, for this undeserved Honour, in esteeming us worthy of Your Royal Presence. Our Addresses too for Your Gracious Promises and Favours lately made, and shewed to all Your Subjects, would no doubt have rendred us more grateful: But Your Majesty, that is not to learn the Constitution of the meanest Borough within your Empire, understands what influences this Place. Forgive, Dread Sir, this Stop and loss of time to Your Sacred Majesty. I am silent when I have said, All Greatness attend the KING, and long live JAMES the Second.

FINIS.

421066